Men arrested in Madison among dozens of immigrants detained

By John Hult
South Dakota Searchlight

It’s unknown how many immigrants have been held for removal in South Dakota since President Donald Trump took office in January promising mass deportations, but public jail rosters in the state show more than two dozen being held now.

A U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement spokesperson told South Dakota Searchlight that arrest statistics will be updated soon. The most recent figures on its website are from December.

A high-profile ICE operation Tuesday in Madison resulted in the arrests of eight people accused of being in the country without legal permission. Before that, ICE was already using jails in South Dakota as waystations for immigration actions more often since Trump took office, according to Minnehaha County Sheriff Mike Milstead.

“They’re not only doing what’s been reported on in Madison,” he said. “They’re doing investigations around the clock, with other federal agencies.”

22 at Sioux Falls jail
As of Thursday morning, there were 22 people detained at the Sioux Falls jail with pending immigration issues, according to Milstead, who said the figure can change by the hour as inmates come and go.

About half of the current detainees with ICE holds came to the attention of immigration agents after being arrested on state-level criminal charges. The others arrived at the jail for removal actions alone, and Milstead said that activity has increased.

The jail holds federal inmates for both ICE and the U.S. Marshals Service, which oversees people accused of federal crimes, including those related to immigration. The feds pay the county $112 a day per federal inmate.

People targeted by ICE for removal who don’t have criminal charges can only be held at the jail in Sioux Falls for 72 hours before being transferred to an ICE detention facility, Milstead said.

Those facilities are themselves local jails, but Sioux Falls is not designated as a long-term detention facility for ICE.

Unlike inmates targeted for removal alone, inmates with ICE holds and criminal charges can stay in Sioux Falls until their case concludes. An inmate who comes in on an ICE hold and is later charged with a crime is transferred to the U.S. Marshals Service.

“If they’re Marshals prisoners, we’ve held them for years sometimes,” Milstead said.

Jails cooperate with ICE across South Dakota

Milstead’s jail has cooperated with ICE for more than a decade as part of the agency’s Secure Communities Program, under which participating local jails send booking fingerprints to both the FBI and ICE. The FBI uses the fingerprints to check for federal warrants and federal criminal charges. ICE checks for prior interactions with immigration agents.

The Minnehaha County Jail also sends the names of every foreign-born detainee to be cross-checked for legal status by ICE’s Criminal Alien Program.

The jail has agreed to step up its cooperation. Milstead recently signed a 287(g) agreement with ICE, which will require some of his deputies to take about eight hours of training, after which they’ll be able to serve ICE warrants for removal actions. There are several types of 287(g) agreements, all of which enable some measure of cross-deputization to allow local law enforcement to work on behalf of ICE.

Milstead and Hughes County Sheriff Patrick Callahan, in Pierre, both signed up for the warrant service program through 287(g) this spring. It won’t be a large change operationally in Sioux Falls, said Milstead, who expects to train around a dozen people.

Inmates brought to the jail by ICE on removal proceedings have already been served removal warrants by ICE agents.

Those who come to jail on criminal charges and are later alleged to be in the country illegally are served removal warrants by ICE agents after those agents obtain warrants from a judge. The Minnehaha County Jail’s 287(g) agreement will allow trained deputies to serve those warrants, eliminating the need for an ICE agent to return to the jail for that purpose after asking for them.

Callahan told South Dakota Searchlight he’ll be the local officer trained to serve removal warrants. His jail has no inmates with immigration holds.

Pennington County, South Dakota’s second-largest county by population, had four inmates with ICE holds as of Thursday afternoon, spokesperson Helene Duhamel said.

Those arrested appear in federal court

The eight men targeted in an immigration enforcement operation at two Madison businesses this week are accused of using fraudulent documents to get their jobs and had been under investigation for months.

The U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement inquiries that ultimately led to their detention and criminal charges began in February, according to documents filed in the U.S. District Court of South Dakota.

One of the men is accused of fraudulently misusing visas, permits and other documents. The other seven are each accused of one count of fraudulent use of identification documents. Each of the charges carry up to $250,000 in fines and up to five years in prison.

All but one of the men were arrested at one of the two businesses in Madison that employed them, Global Polymer Industries and Manitou Equipment America.

Manitou received a $1 million tax break from the Governor’s Office of Economic Development for an expansion in December of 2022. At that point, U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem was governor of South Dakota. Manitou’s owner told South Dakota Searchlight during a 2023 tour that the business employed 250 people.

Noem was given an honorary doctorate and delivered a commencement speech to graduates at Dakota State University in Madison just days before the arrests. Approximately 200 people protested outside that event.

The details of each case vary slightly, but affidavits — sworn written statements — from two ICE agents allege the men used fraudulent identification documents and were working under names that weren’t their own. The agents reviewed I-9 documents, which are used by employers to verify a person’s eligibility to work in the U.S., and allegedly learned in February and March that the names on the documents were fraudulent.

Five of the men had signed the allegedly fraudulent I-9s in 2022, suggesting they’d worked under their adopted names for years. Two others signed I-9s in 2023, and one signed his in 2024.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Veronica Duffy signed the search warrants Friday that authorized the operation resulting in the arrests.

One of the men was at home, according to court documents. The rest were at work. In six of the affidavits, ICE agents allege the men admitted they’d been working under false names.

Five are from Nicaragua, two are from Guatemala, and one is from El Salvador, according to ICE.

On Thursday in Sioux Falls, Judge Duffy ordered that the men be held by the U.S. Marshals Service at least until a preliminary hearing can be held. That hearing, which will take place within the next 14 days, would offer the men an opportunity to challenge their charges, and to make arguments for pre-trial release.

Featured Artist

April Reed grew up on a small farm just east of Nisland. Most of her childhood was spent outside enjoying nature in all its many forms. Presently, she lives in Hill City with her husband, their children and pets. They love getting out and exploring the woods and national parks. She has a formal education in art. She obtained a Bachelor of Fine Arts in Art from the University of South Dakota.

In college, students were often asked what art meant to us; to her it is about communication and connection. She loves nature and the Black Hills. She believes most people who live and visit the Black Hills can see the place is special. Using imagery that we have all experienced is a way she likes to connect with others. The animals, the places, the people and the history of this place is her main subject. She tries to make the painting more than just a familiar image by using gestural brush strokes and hues to invoke more of the moment in time; what it is like to experience that moment. In the end, she just wants to share what she love about the area with others.
